It's 1867, and a desperate young woman is looking for love in one of the wrong places – Philadelphia, where suitable unmarried men are scarcer than hen's teeth. But don't sell her short. Ask anybody who knows this strong-willed 18-year-old, and they will tell you when she sets her mind to do something, nothing can stop her.

Meet Mary, who left her parents' home the minute she turned 18. She got a job working 60 hours a week as the personal maid to the spoiled and spiteful daughter of one of city's richest men. And for that she was paid $5 a week, a meager sum that left her floundering financially.

So Mary's foray into freedom and independence soured in a flash. She was determined to change her life, but how? Then, in a moment of pure serendipity, she discovered mail order brides.

That's how she met Sherman Dalton, a lonely farmer who lived 2,864 miles from her in Oregon. Sherman claimed to have money. He also admitted he was raised in a Western society in which women were considered lesser human beings.

Will Sherman be all he seems to be? Will Mary find a way to show him she will not accept a man who will treat her like a servant?

Will Ma and Pa, who gave Mary a Christian upbringing, give her their blessing?

This is a story about loneliness, hope, fear, courage, moral strength, character, Christian faith, love and romance.
