1794 Flewwelling Antique Sampler: Historic Antique Sampler Pattern Susan Bradford

Susan Bradford has worked to make an adaptation pattern of this historic, antique sampler available for stitchers to enjoy in more current times. The actual original 1794 antique sampler was loaned to her so that she could create the pattern. Needless to say it was handled with great care.

With significant decay in the original sampler due to time and exposure, an "adaptation" sampler pattern was done, rather than an exact reproduction. Susan used several techniques to make the sampler adaptation, including PC Stitch software, high intensity OttLite, large magnifying glass, and a huge amount of patience. The photographs inside here are of the original sampler and were helpful.

Susan also researched to find sound conservation techniques for the family to insure that this historic antique sampler might avoid further deterioration.

Thanks to the family descendants of the original stitcher of this sampler, we are able to share a bit of the history of her family along with the pattern. This sampler has been passed down through the family generations of daughters, starting with Colonial times in America. If only the sampler could talk!!

Finally, Susan has stitched her adaptation pattern. The framed result resides in the local Historical Society Museum.

The pattern will be viewed best on a higher resolution Kindle.
